all. He should have, but he didn't. If he was searching for the truth of things, if he was on a journey to understand what the world looked like, who the people around him were, what they believed in, he never found it. There was no meaning, there was no purpose, there was no knowledge behind the great mystery of it all. There was no reason for it. This is part of the reason why his path is so confused and turbulent. He was always asking so many questions, but there was no answer. He walked for so long, and he didn't find anything. He is the only person who has ever walked in search of something, and then come back and said "I know now, there was something there." And then I was like...what? You had some idea about that, but you can't explain it to me? Conceptual quantum Ok, so I have written up so many questions in a response to the most essential topic in the universe: physics. I mean, aren't physics my favourite aspect of all of science (which, by the way, you should be excellent at, because all of science is based on physics, you know). Anyway, since I'm going up with a bang, I'm gonna throw it all in one ball for you. How am I gonna do that? Well, how about a conceptual quantum? I'm not kidding. Think of everything you know. Everything you think of. Everything you've ever used. Everything you've ever imagined. I want you to throw it all in a pile on the floor, and I want you to say, "This is everything I know." Anything you can't define, or that you have trouble explaining, I want you to throw it in too. Turn off your brain for a second and let everything out. It could be the most useless pile of garbage you've ever seen. Done? See, now I have this collection of experiences, and it is too confusing. I can't handle it. I can't understand it. So, I'll compartmentalize it. I will divide it up and throw just the stuff I can explain into the first corner. I'll put the stuff that I can't define into the second. The stuff that I can't [Postoperative air leak--own case report]. The paper presents an own case of postoperative airleak. The phenomenon is discussed in detail and literature is summarized. The authors reviewed 9 previous reports about airleaks following the creation of a chest wall and thoracic wall defect. All patients presented with airleaks, and the problem was most frequently detected during postoperative chest control. 1) A variety of procedures that cause a thoracic wall defect increase the risk of airleaks. 2) The high pulmonary compliance in combination with the expansion of the subsegmental bronchus conduits increase the risk of this complication. 3) The use of chest tubes is considered safe in patients with respiratory requirements after surgery. The early detection of an airleak is important because it may be treated and resolved with simple methods. For the last week of the Women's Tennis season, the three of you were a team of one. Having a college teammate definitely creates a bond and helps to create a more competitive atmosphere. You all fought hard to reach the finals, and I was cheering for you as much as any of the men. (But I'm a girl. You'd think I'd be in a somewhat better position to root for you.) Congratulations to Serena Williams, Daniela Hantuchova, and Larisa Urquiza. All three of you were stellar in the finals, and all three of you were in the final match for 7 and 8 seeds. (Funny how that can happen to one of the two women's players on the same team.) Next year, I predict you'll all play better in singles events. The way that you have been playing doubles (especially with Maria, see the above video clip), you all seem to have trouble finding your individual best doubles partners. It will be interesting to see if you all end up the trios on the girls side of next year's WTT. Just ask Maria Sharapova how fun it can be when there's three of you in competition. Well, the Women's Tennis Association has unveiled its list of the Top 30 male and female singles and doubles players for the 2007 season. Congratulations to those of you who made the list! Your 2007 season is about to begin. It appears that for the first time since 1998, the WTA has decided not to send players to the Tijuana Bolsa de la
