A Brief Overview of Age-Related Macular Degeneration (AMD) and how to Prevent Blindness due to AMD About 3 million people in the United States are affected by AMD, making it one of the most common causes of visual impairment. According to the National Eye Institute, more than half of people older than 75 years develop some form of AMD. While AMD tends to be a progressive disease that worsens over time, a person diagnosed with AMD can typically live a long and healthy life. What is AMD?AMD is caused by a loss of the light-sensitive cells in the retina of the eye called retinal cells. They are similar to cells in the inner surface of the eyes that are responsible for the conversion of light into color and images. AMD is not a disease of the eye itself, but rather of the layer of cells at the back of the eye, called the retinal pigment epithelium. This layer acts as a protective barrier, ridding the eye of foreign particles. The body's ability to form new blood vessels in the retina decreases as we age. Angiogenesis, or the development of new blood vessels, is needed for the retina to properly function. The old blood vessels begin to leak blood vessels, and new ones do not form quickly enough to sustain the blood flow to the retina. This leaves the retina deprived of nutrients and oxygen. As the disease progresses, changes occur in the macula, which is responsible for central vision. In early AMD, blood vessels grow under

You can also read our "Legal Information" on our site. You can also read our "Legal Information" on our site. Not only does Site Surfer take a few hours of the time to set up, but it also wastes a decent amount of time on loading. I would rather spend that time browsing the internet instead of switching back and forth between tabs. It also doesn't learn much about the websites you visit like some other browsers do. The cookies and history tabs don't update if they are not active. After visiting the website for the first time, it will automatically connect to the closest compatible site based on the protocol it found. It would be nice if a time limit were set before the protocol was changed if it is still not compatible with the current time. I recommend manually typing in the URLs you want to
