Taenia solium: an unrecognized causative agent of stroke? To provide clinical evidence for cysticercosis or Taenia solium infection as a possible pathogen in cases of stroke and to suggest its role in cases of unexplained stroke. Serum samples and cerebral tissue samples were obtained from 19 patients who had died of stroke in 1992. Antibodies to T. solium were screened in serum using an enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay. Examination of brain tissue samples, including examination for parasites and for Gomori's methenamine silver staining, was performed. Sera of all patients were found to be positive by enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay for antibodies to T. solium. Antibodies to T. solium were detected in cerebral tissue specimens from 3 patients. Gomori's methenamine silver-positive granulomas were detected in cerebral tissue samples from 2 patients. The findings in the patients with positive sera and brain tissue samples should be confirmed by further studies. This article documents clinical findings in patients with stroke who have T. solium infection. These findings are as follows: the mean time from onset of stroke to death was not significantly different between the patients who were positive and those who were negative for antibodies against T. solium; neurological symptoms progressed more slowly in the patients who were positive than in those who were negative for antibodies against T. solium; and only 2 of 19 cases showed positive results for cerebral tissue samples. These results suggest that cysticercosis, which usually causes asymptomatic infection, can cause a stroke. Forgot Password Home / News / Received letter from Housing authorities in Western Cape regarding rental lease violation Received letter from Housing authorities in Western Cape regarding rental lease violation Published on Thu, Mar 13 2018 The Western Cape province has once again created a headache for both landlords and tenants as they are now forced to pay fees if the crime of breaking lease has been committed. Apparently, the protection act of this province treats domestic servants in an illegal way as the house owners who have and are renting their houses to tenants are not allowed to discriminate them. The Provincial Department of Human Settlements, Community Services and Environmental Health, along with the Agriculture, Land and Forestry, and Home Affairs department, have found ways of letting tenants pay an extra amount to the department or the traditional house owners in order to leave their homes or repair their houses after they have broken or not paid a rental lease. The department has released an official statement saying that owners who are not able to pay such fees will suffer from a bank ban to finance their own homes for a period that will coincide with the duration of the lease breach. It is considered as a violation of the Protection Act and it can be committed by homeowners who are renting their homes to tenants or by tenants who are having a relationship with the owners of the said homes. According to the statement, if there is no lessee who will pay an amount of R100 to the department, then the house will be placed under the management of a curator who will decide on the rent for the period from the date of the violation until the time when the lessee will pay what should have been paid to the owners. Basically, according to the statement, the objective of this department is to protect the owners of the houses in the province and also to protect landlords who are taking a risk by letting their properties to tenants. The Russellville School Board voted unanimously last night to give Peola Middle School Principal Johnny Gibson a one-year contract extension. Gibson's salary will remain at the current level of $108,000 until the 2012-13 school year. Board member Jason Perkins was the only member to vote against the proposed contract for Gibson. However, Perkins did vote for the contract extension at the January meeting. "I think that this is a good thing," Perkins said. "I've talked to Mr. Gibson and there is a sense of understanding at Peola that is
