This is useful for testing features and interacting with interactive users, but it could be a security issue if you were given a maliciously crafted file and were encouraged to interact with it. For example, imagine a scenario where someone sends you a file named "|", and you believe that this is some python code that performs some critical operation. So it is possible that the figure contains an instruction to directly execute some code. Q: is it possible to specify minion resources to run with Azure Linux? I wanted to change the minions permissions of an Azure Linux Vnet. I am using "azure-linux" resource group. I see the "minion" resource type that I can apply to these nodes. But the possible properties for this resource are "Load Balancer ip address", "Load Balancer FQDN", "Load Balancer port", "Load Balancer port health check protocol", "Load Balancer port health check port", "Load Balancer port health check port name", and "load balancer port health check protocol". And there is no property to specify a " 3da54e8ca3
