Note Most of what I discuss in this section also applies to the more powerful iPad, but I don't go into details about that device, because this book isn't about tablet PCs specifically. Here are the other ways that you can make a book or graphic program guide: * You can print the book to a standard printer with a laser printer, an inkjet printer, or both. See Printing Guide Pages to learn about the features that printers offer and which printer to choose. The options discussed in the following sections also apply to a large-format printer. * You can add your own printer or laser printer to your

This guide will help you understand how to apply various filters to an image. Some filters may alter the image's color or blend the images colors together. Some filters will simply "enhance" the image. Filters can be applied to different layers, so it is important to understand how layers work to make best use of the tools. Selecting a Layer To select a layer, simply select the item. To select multiple layers, select a layer in the Layers panel and press Ctrl/Command+A (Mac) or click the down arrow next to Layer (Figure 1). Alternatively, you can use the Edit > Select > All Layers command. Figure 1: To select a layer, select it in the Layers panel. Selecting multiple layers is useful if you want to remove or alter multiple layers at once. Layers Layers are a way to split an image up into different areas. Each layer can be colored and shaped, and you can add effects or adjustment layers to individual layers. You can merge layers together or remove layers without losing any of the adjustments. Figure 2: Layers are used to divide an image into different sections or areas. Creating Layers Once you understand how to select a layer, you'll be able to do the following: Use the Layer panel to select, move, and adjust individual layers. Open an image as a new layer. Add new layers to an existing image. An important thing to remember about layers is that you can alter any layer at any time. It does not matter which layer you start with, as long as you start making changes to a layer. For example, if you select a layer, add an adjustment, and then move the layer, the original layer and adjustments still exist. This is not the case if you add a layer later in the process. The original layer and any adjustment layers will be lost. Editing a Layer To edit an existing layer, simply select it in the Layers panel and press one of the following shortcuts: + to adjust the opacity of the layer. To adjust the opacity of the selected layer, press Ctrl/Command + 1, Shift+Ctrl/Command + 1 or Command/Ctrl + 0. To apply a specific color to the selected layer, press Shift + Ctrl/Command + A. To apply a specific color

What's New In?

— A recent community survey of leaders within the East Raleigh community found that the majority of residents oppose a proposal to build a large mixed-use development at the corner of East McDowell Road and South New Hope Road. Of the 91 surveys that were submitted, nearly 50 percent of respondents, including 71 percent of Democrats, 46 percent of Republicans and 71 percent of unaffiliated voters, indicated that they do not favor the development. There was one exception, a Republican supporter of the development, who said she felt very strongly that the project was needed to build in the area. Among the key issues that the East Raleigh community said they did not support were: The inappropriate scale of the proposed project The increase in traffic and noise in the area The loss of natural green space The impact on the homes that currently exist in the neighborhood These responses are in contrast to recent surveys that have found strong support for the proposal. For example, in April 2014, the a Raleigh-based youth group that represents high school students in the East Wake Community Coalition sent out an online survey to ask students in grades K-5 about the proposal. The survey found that most respondents, 69 percent of survey takers, thought the project would be a good addition to the area. In addition, a recent paper that was issued by the East Raleigh Citizens Coalition found that about 70 percent of residents are in favor of the project. On June 13, the community survey results were presented at an East Raleigh Neighborhood Association meeting. The neighborhood association is organized under the ERC Coalition, which was created in 2012 to represent the needs of the neighborhood. Approximately 90 people attended the meeting, many of whom were residents of the East Raleigh community. The results were met with a mix of reactions. Most people said that they support the East Raleigh project, but were not pleased with the amount of traffic that will flow in and out of the area. Most respondents said that they were against the project because the scale was inappropriate for the area, with about 50 percent saying that the project was too big and too tall, while the rest said that they felt it was too big for the space it would occupy. Other major concerns among community members were about the loss of natural green space, the increase in traffic, crime and whether the development will help or hurt the neighborhood. Again, many people agreed with the proposal, with about 70 percent of respondents saying that they believed the development was an improvement to the neighborhood. Some attendees at the
