Image Manipulation or Image Editing? The
terms "image
manipulation" and
"image editing" can mean different things to different people. The word manipulation

suggests that it is a way of changing the content of an image, whereas editing is an activity that changes the appearance. For example, imagine taking a picture in the middle of the forest as a sunset; in Photoshop, you would be selecting and editing the sun and sky portions of the picture. You would then apply color filters and other effects to the picture, such as blurring to make the image look interesting or to make the color more natural. The result could be to change the content of the picture but not the picture itself. Another example would be adding or subtracting people from the picture. The result could be to change the picture or to change the content. As a general rule, it is best to use the term image manipulation to describe activities such as creating new images, color correcting, or applying masking, which all relate to the content of the image. The term image editing usually refers to the more complex activities such as text, brushes, and graphics. A good professional tool to learn how to manipulate images in Photoshop is the Content-Aware Fill feature. If you have never used Photoshop before, you are in luck: The free version of Photoshop is perfect for beginners or for making basic edits. The premium version of Photoshop — which costs about $300 — gives you access to more tools, enables complex content-dependent image editing such as retouching and compositing, and enables multitouch editing. Photoshop works well on Macs as well as Windows computers. Photoshop uses either pixels or dpixels to show what's in an image. This means you see only the size of the canvas of your image. A dpixel is roughly equivalent to the size of the pixels in your Mac or PC screen. For example, if your screen is 900 dpixels wide, and the image that you see is 900 pixels wide, you are seeing the width of the image. Pixels are simply not visible. The figure shows an image with pixels, indicating the size of the image. Each dot is a pixel. >

Pixel-based applications, such as Photoshop, show the current size and dimensions of the image on the screen. Other images may use dpxels, which is roughly equivalent to the size of the pixels on a Mac or PC screen. When you change the size of the image, it will expression and prolonged activation of the stress-response pathway in epithelial cells after exposure to genotoxic agents. Cell cycle arrest and apoptosis of cells may be triggered by the stress response through a c-Myc-dependent pathway. However, little is known about how cells in situ respond to these stimuli in the context of a tissue. The induction of apoptosis and cell cycle arrest in response to DNA damage is studied in epithelial cells of the murine lung using the non-small cell carcinoma cell line A/J (A/JK) following exposure to the DNA-damaging agent bleomycin. The effect of bleomycin was time dependent, with initial activation of the stress-response pathway occurring after 8 hr of exposure and progressive inhibition of c-Myc gene expression, which peaked at 24 hr after exposure. At 48 hr, there was widespread apoptosis in the lung epithelium and much of the residual c-myc expression was located in sites that were undergoing early stages of apoptosis. The results suggest that this pathway plays an important role in the initiation and progression of bleomycin-induced apoptosis and that its activity may be modulated by c-myc expression.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to earpieces of mobile telecommunication devices. More particularly, the invention relates to an earpiece having an illuminated graphic indicia thereon. 2.

---

Description of Related Art

A number of innovations have been made in the field of mobile telecommunication devices, including cellular telephones. In the course of design and development of these devices, there has been considerable emphasis placed on safety, and both government and industry standards promulgated to insure that all such devices meet certain minimum safety standards. One such safety standard is an eye protection requirement, which includes a “front face is/can be illuminated” requirement. In order to meet this requirement, it is necessary to have an eye protection assembly that is illuminated so that a user can view the indicia thereon. These eye protection assemblies are oftentimes mounted to the earpiece. These earpieces are formed of flexible plastic material, such as silicone. Since these earpieces are intended to be worn on a user's head, there are limits to the size and design of the earpiece.

It is often the case that there is only sufficient room to incorporate the graphic indicia into a relatively small portion of the earpiece. It is also the case
